

Protest in city against SC order on removing street dogs

► Animal welfare groups say decision violates ABC rules

Bhopal: A peaceful protest was organized at Rishabhdev Park on Sunday against the Supreme Court's recent directive to remove street dogs from public places such as schools, colleges, hospitals, railway stations, and bus stands, and shift them to rehabilitation centres.

Swati Gaurav, State Coordinator and Bhopal Unit Head of People for Animals (PFA), said the Supreme Court's November 7 order is not only impractical but also directly violates the Animal Birth Control (ABC) Rules.

"Under the ABC Rules, no community dog can be removed from its territory. Relocation is completely illegal and also against scientific understanding. A dog captured from one street cannot survive in another," she said. She added that these concerns prompted animal lovers to gather and protest the decision. Demand to be heard on Jan 16: Swati appealed to the Supreme Court to allow animal welfare organizations to present their arguments during the next hearing on January 16. She also urged Chief Secretary Anurag Jain to ensure that the rehabilitation plan being submitted to the court is realistic. "Bhopal alone has over one lakh dogs. Does the government have the capacity and budget to rehabilitate them? Without a proper plan, shelters will become deathbeds," she warned.

“Decision neither Constitutional nor Scientific”

Local activists said the order contradicts the ABC policy, the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, and the principle of coexistence. They emphasized strengthening sterilization, vaccination, and responsible administration rather than removing dogs.

The protest began at 4 p.m. and concluded peacefully with demands focused on animal rights and constitutional values. Activists said removing millions of community dogs is inhumane and impractical, stressing that the ABC program remains the most effective scientific solution.

Tribal women turn entrepreneurs

► Migration curbed through poultry units in Raisen

Raisen: In the rural areas of Silwani development block in Raisen district, tribal women have transformed their lives by joining self-help groups and starting their own enterprises. Once dependent on seasonal migration, many of them are now successful entrepreneurs who also provide employment to others. The Siarmau cluster, located 25 to 40 km from Silwani, earlier saw 5 to 10 families migrating every year to work in poultry sheds in Gujarat, Maharashtra and other states. During the COVID-19 pandemic, when these families returned home, a Livelihood Mission team met them and identified poultry work as a viable local alternative to reduce migration. As part of this initiative, the Siarmau cluster-level organization was made an MNRE-GA agency, and a Rs 69-lakh project was prepared to construct 50 poultry sheds.

Poultry feed manufacturing unit also set up: Since maize is widely cultivated in the region, a poultry feed manufacturing unit was also set up under the PM's Employment Generation Programme, supported by Madhya Pradesh Gramin Bank.

This unit purchases local maize, produces chicken feed, and now provides employment to over 20 families, significantly reducing migration from the area.
